This Forger Got the Money, But the Officers Got Him.

CLEVER WORK OF THE LOCAL POLICE

The third time Inside of three weeks!

And now, maybe, the charm is broken, but still there's one bank that hasn't been tried.

Between 2 and 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon a smooth, well-dressed young man, apparently about 25 years old, presented at the Bank of Maysville a demand draft for $300, drawn on the Boyle National Bank, Danville, and signed by Dr. Bright Shaffer in a neat hand.

He inquired of President J. F. Barbour, "How long will it take to collect this?" "Three or four days" was the answer. "I'd like mighty well to get the money right away if I can."

To this Mr. Barbour said if he would get a good endorsement on it he would cash it.

The stranger represented himself as a travel agent for the Phoenix Drug Company of Chicago, and rattled off the names of several local physicians, Dr. Reed's among the number.

"If you will get Dr. Reed's name on the paper we will cash it," said the President.

The man then left, and after the lapse of sufficient time to have gone to the Doctor's office he returned and handed the draft to Mr. Barbour, with the name "John A. Reed" written across the back—a very close imitation of the Doctor's signature, by the way.

Mr. Barbour has loyal love for the people of his old Danville home, and it was pleasure to assist one who did business with the Banks of that good old town; and when he learned that his patron knew his life long friend Mack Wallace of the Boyle National, he was rapidly approaching the if you don't see what you want just ask for it stage, and promptly requested Cashier Hoeflich to shell out the cash.

As Mr. Hoeflich was doing out the crisp $10 bills "Mr. Shaffer" made another shot in his confident game by volunteering to draw only $180, leaving $2 to his credit in Mr. Barbour's Bank.

The stranger took the $180 and departed.

After he had stepped out Mr. Barbour telephoned Dr. Reed to make inquiry as to the transaction; but the Doctor was not home.

Some time later Mr. George Barbour met Dr. Reed on the street and told him what had occurred.

The Doctor at once disclaimed all knowledge of the affair.

This naturally caused a commotion at the Bank.

The draft had already gone by the 4:25 mark; and the train bearing it was well on the way to Cincinnati—and probably Mr. Shaffer was on the same train.

Chief Ort was sent for and his plans were soon laid.

The lively stores were visited, as was the ferrymouth; the Westbound local of the C. & O., which leaves here at 5:15 p.m. was watched, and on this train Special Officer Frank Purnell and Mr. James Barbour started down the road, while Chief Ort and Mr. George Barbour were to take the Eastbound train which passes here at 5:35 p.m.

Captain Ed. Fitzgerald, the C. & O. Detective, had come up on No. 2 at 3:36, on which "Shaffer" was a passenger, the latter having bought at Cincinnati a ticket for South Portsmouth, and he had had a talk with Collector Allen regarding an arrangement whereby he could stop off at Maysville. This conversation took place in Captain Fitzgerald's presence and directed his attention to the man who appeared to be exceedingly nervous.

Captain Ed. Fitzgerald, the C. & O. Detective, learned of the Bank transaction, and as he was going west on the train with Officer Purnell he lent his assistance in identifying the man.

When the train rescued Brothman, the first station west of the city, Mr. Shaffer stepped aboard, having walked from Maysville to that place.

Captain Fitzgerald spotted the man and asked Mr. James Barbour if he was the party who got the money.

Mr. Barbour gave a prompt affirmative reply, when Officer Purnell and Captain Fitzgerald searched him, finding every dollar of the money just as it had been handed to him by Cashier Hoeflich.

He was brought back and taken before Judge Wedsworth, who held him for a hearing this morning.

In the Police Court he was thoroughly searched, the only evidence of his identity being a morocco pocketbook with the name of "S. T. McClung, M. D." embossed in it.

He refused at first to give any name, telling Chief Ort that he might call him John Smith.

Subsequent developments, however, threw some light on his history.

This name is McClung, as appears in his pocketbook; he was raised at Rupert, W. Va., and later to Portsmouth; he is married and has a sister dying with consumption at his home. He graduated from the Louisville Medical College in 1895.

He had recently written letters to several local physicians, and in this way obtained the signature of Dr. Reed, which he had so closely imitated that it may be doubted if the Doctor himself could tell it was forged if it appeared in a different connection.

Before finding the Bank of Maysville McClung had presented the draft at the State National, where it was declined with thanks.

He will probably waive examination, plead guilty and throw himself on the mercy of the Court.

The capture of the man was fortunate for the Bank; and it was a creditable piece of work for Chief Ort, who planned it, and to the officers who carried his plans into execution.

OUR WASHINGTON MAN.

THE LEDGER'S SPECIAL LETTER FROM THE CAPITAL.

Special Correspondence Public Ledger.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12th, 1897.

The counting of the electoral vote in the hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday was not disturbed by open and oral charges of fraud in the Southern states as was expected. Representative Murray of South Carolina, who intended challenging the vote of that state upon the ground that a large proportion of its Republican voters were disfranchised at the late election, finally discontinued that it was not judicious to disturb the progress of the electoral count by an action which could not have any effect other than the mere calling attention to a disgraceful state of facts which are already known to exist.

That the Republican vote of the South has been systematically suppressed by various methods since the war is well known, but the art of doing this scientifically and under the sanction of the state laws has been only recently learned. Those who are determined to prevent the Republicans from casting the vote to which they are entitled in the South have discovered that by an educational qualification—a large proportion of the colored voters of the South can be kept away from the polls, and their object thus attained under the guise of the very highest and noblest intentions. By placing in the constitutions or upon the statute books of their various states requirements which only permit those who can read the constitution or the printed ballots to cast their votes, they have succeeded in disfranchising a very large share of the colored voters of that section.

That the colored voters of the South have been, and are, systematically and successfully kept from the polls is proven absolutely by a study of the official figures of the census and the National elections. In the seven extreme Southern states, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Arkansas, are grouped more than one half of the entire colored population of the United States. These states in 1870 cast 99,114 votes. They have gained over 3 millions in population since that time, and yet, in 1890, they cast but 70,011 votes, an actual loss of 198,103 votes. The gain in population in the 20 years in question was 66 per cent., while the loss in votes was 30 per cent. These figures of themselves show that the voters of the South are not exercising the elective privilege which the Constitution of the United States grants to them. A gain of 66 per cent. in voting strength and a loss of 20 per cent. in votes actually cast is of itself sufficient proof to satisfy the most obtuse mind that there is something wrong with the manner in which the elections of the South are conducted.

Congressman Murray insists that the vote of South Carolina does not represent the voters of the state, that probably half of the voters of that state are not permitted to exercise their elective franchise. That he is undoubtedly right in this assertion is shown by the fact that the vote of 1896 was only about one-third of the vote of 1876, although the population of the state has enormously increased in the meantime. South Carolina's population in 1870 was 705,608, and in 1890 1,151,149, a gain of about 400,000. Yet the vote fell off from 1876 to 1896, in 1876, to 68,908 in 1896, a decrease of nearly two thirds. The same facts apply in the other extreme Southern states. In Georgia the population increased nearly 700,000 from 1870 to 1890, yet the vote of 1896 was nearly 30,000 less than in 1876; the figures are: population in 1870, 1,154,109; population in 1890, 1,837,555; vote in 1876, 190,534; vote in 1896, 162,744. In Florida the population has more than doubled since 1870, while the vote of 1896 was actually less than that of 1876. The population of Alabama increased 60 per cent. from 1870 to 1890, while the vote increased but about 12 per cent. In Mississippi the population increased from 1870 to 1890, 50 per cent., while the vote fell from 164,715 in 1876, to 68,513 in 1896.

In Louisiana the population increased 35 per cent., and the vote actually fell of 31 per cent. In Arkansas the population increased 133 per cent., and the vote only 54 per cent.

Representative Murray did a service by calling attention to these facts, though he did not make an official record of them by making an objection to the count of the vote of his state as he originally intended. They are facts which every citizen of the United States ought to recognize, that in one section of this country practically one-half of the votes, and those belonging to one party almost exclusively, are systematically suppressed.

Since our last report death has entered the home of William and Rossa Polley of Plumville and claimed two sweet little children for its victims. The first to go was Jennie, aged 1 year and 14 days. She died on the 6th and was buried on Sunday last. Death came again on the 9th and took the little boy, Clarence, aged 3 years, 11 months and 26 days. From the best information we can get, the cause of death in each case must have been congenital.

Rev. N. G. Grizelle preached a double funeral service at the Plumville Church on Wednesday evening, which was very touching and impressive, after which the remains of the little boy were laid to rest in the Plumville Cemetery. Molie Colburn, Annie Ryan, Stanley Colburn and Lizzie Ring acted as pallbearers.
